Love, Come Back

Mao Mao, a 16-year-old boy from a wealthy city family, plays games on the Internet all day. His father sees no choice but to send his son to the grasslands in Inner Mongolian on exchange with little Bateer, a Mongolian boy, so that they can both experience a totally different life. From the noisy city to the peaceful grasslands, Mao Mao, although uneasy at first, is moved by the honesty of the herdsman, and begins to understand the broader complexities of life and begin to understand the intentions of his parents. Little Bateer, after arriving in a modern city and similarly experiencing many shocks, begins to understand that many things in life need to be struggled for. At the end of this "vacation", both the city boy and the grasslands boy, with their experience of changing places, achieve balance and unity in their personalities and souls.
